NOTICE.

THE Undersigned call the attention of Masters and Agents of vessels discharging at this port to the great advantage to be gained in point of convenience, despatch, and economy, by making use of their Wharves at New Harbour.

With the assistance of steam cranes, a general cargo can be landed easily in a few days—or in about one-fifth of the time usually occupied discharging in the roads.

These are large, dry, and very commodious brick godowns on the wharves, which vessels have free use of for cargo while discharging.

The entire land dispatches with, and pilfering in cargo, common to those, are avoided by vessels using the wharves.

Cartage of cargo to the trust (which is within easy distance) is considered to be not more than it charges from the roads, and the coolie hire discharging alongside is less.

There is always a large stock of the best English and Welsh coals on the premises, which are supplied to steamers at the lowest market price, and vessels going alongside to take in or discharging coals pay no wharfage.

Vessels discharging cargo may obtain a wharfage of 20 cents per ton, and trifling charges when the immense advantages gained are taken into consideration.

Arrangements have been made by which all repairs to ships or steamers can be done with despatch inside the vessels are lying alongside the wharves.

There is an efficient European pilot on the premises, who, when required, a steam tug is always available.

RECENT EVENTS.

(From the "China Overland Trade Report.")

THE present number of this periodical will add nothing to what is already known about Japan and its intestine commotions. Everything is in statu quo. Not in statu quo ante bellum, but as things were when the last mail left. Excessive rains have inundated a great portion of the country, swollen the rivers, torn up the roads, and rendered the movements of troops impossible. Trade suffers, and the foreign community find it hard work to keep themselves amused. The Japanese Government de facto, has given notice that they claim a revision of the tariff, so far as regards Tea and Silk. This is done under the provisions of clause II. of the convention of Yedo, of 1866, which enables either party, on giving six months' notice to the other, to claim a revision of the duty on these articles, based on the average prices of the three previous years, so as to maintain the duty at something like five per cent. on the value. Yedo is to be thrown open to foreign trade, and rumour hath it that the Mikado is to have a residence there. If so the city will undergo a change of name.

There is no further news from Japan about the Coolie ship, or supposed Coolie ship, that arrived there. So far as people in Hongkong have been able to learn, the vessel is not, after all, the Providence. Nothing definite has transpired on the subject.

Beyond the promotion or removal of TSENG-KWO-FAN, from Nankin to the Governor Generalship of Chihli, there is nothing in the political history of China during the past fortnight or more. Mr. Medhurst's exertions to obtain from the local authorities at Chinkiang and Yangchow, the amende honorable for the insult offered the Treaty Powers in the persons of the Reverend Mr. TAYLOR and his companions, were unsuccessful. He pushed on then to H. M. S. Rinaldo, Captain Bush, to Nankin, to demand from TSENG-KWO-FAN, the Governor General, the punishment of the officials, gentry, and others through whose sins of omission and commission, Mr. TAYLOR and his party had suffered, and the Treaty had been so grossly violated; compensation of the injury done and losses suffered, and the publication of such a proclamation and in such a manner that the right of British subjects to reside in the interior, and purchase land and rent houses, should be fully vindicated. At first all went smoothly. TSENG-KWO-FAN, was willing to meet Mr. MEDHURST half way. The proclamation was to issue, and to be set up in Yangchow, cut on a stone tablet, in front of the shrine in the south and residence of the Chinese express. The two thousand were to be paid him as compensation; the Chinese imprisoned for having let the house to Mr. TAYLOR were to be released forthwith, and the TAI-TAI and Prefect degraded, while the actual ringleaders in the riot were to be severely punished. Unfortunately before the affair had been finally settled, Captain Bush fell sick, and had to leave, but instead of going down to Shanghai in some one of the many passenger boats that traverse the Yangtse weekly, and leaving the Rinaldo to protect Mr. MEDHURST, and strengthen his hands, Captain Bush made an unfortunate selection in taking with him, The Consul was left behind to conduct his negotiations with the most powerful and proudest of the Chinese magnates in the capital city of his Viceroyalty, from a house boat, at anchor in one of the canals beneath the city walls, and without a peasant within hundreds of miles. TSENG-KWO-FAN is no fool, as once, and refused every demand that had been made on him that was worth persisting in, so that Mr. MEDHURST had to return to Shanghai without having effected anything, and in fact, beaten at all points. The matter will now, it is supposed, have to be referred for final settlement to Peking, and there linger on in a proper diplomatic way to termination. In the meantime the mob, the literati and the anti-foreign party generally, have gained a great victory. They have attacked and insulted English subjects, inflicting serious injuries. They have plundered their residences and driven them out of a city in which their Treaty right to reside and purchase or rent houses is undoubted, and they have not been punished for so doing, either by the English or by their own officials. From the latter they have met with aid and protection, if not thanks and praises. From the neighbourhood of Chefoo come a report of severe punishments inflicted on Chinese Christians, who had granted a temple to a missionary for religious purposes, until under the influence of the priests they repudiated the gift, and denied their signatures. From Formosa come reports of tales of missionaries, both Roman Catholic and Protestant, waylaid, beaten, and insulted; of native Christians tortured and punished, and of their houses being torn down and sacked. There too is the same opposition shown to the entrance of Europeans into the interior. The line of conduct indicated by TSENG-KWO-FAN in his late memorial to the throne on Treaty Revision, is being followed up wherever and whenever occasion offers. The Government of China ceases to oppose European progress. The officials are willing to receive foreigners, and to trade with them and to learn of them and to admit them into the country, or at most they are passive. It is the people, the innumerable multitudes of China, who are, it is said, already suffering severely from the advent of foreigners, who now oppose their further advance. The West has no longer to contend with a Government and an army, but with a united and determined people, over whom, on such a question, the Mandarins have no control. Such is the attitude taken up by the first of Chinese statesmen and generals, and recommended to the throne and to the people; and if this affair at Yangchow, the first fruits of the Alcock's memorial, is allowed to pass unpunished or inadequately punished, the movement will become so strong that it will take an army, and a war, to enable foreigners to maintain themselves in China at all.

The fortnight in Hongkong has been fruitful in murders. A man of the name of YANCEY, in the employment of the Union Dock Company at Kowloong, was set upon on the morning of the 18th ultimo, by an armed band of Chinese, supposed to be Hakkas, and after a desperate resistance so backed and wounded that he died in a few days afterwards. The motives for this assault are unknown, and the culprits are not yet secured. About noon of the same day, one of the Turnkeys at the gaol was knocked down with a blow of a stone-hammer, by a Chinese convict, and died same day of the injuries received. A blue fireman, belonging to the Ajax, one of the steam launch boats, got killed during a skirmish on board, between the white seamen and the darkies; some of the French seamen were taken out of the vessel by the Police, and kept in custody to await the result of the inquest, which it was at first thought would end in a verdict of wilful murder. Counsel for the prisoners disputed the jurisdiction of the Courts in Hongkong to investigate the case, but was of course overruled.

Europeans have been forbidden to make use of the Licensed Gambling Houses.

The Disarmament Ordinance has been repealed, as the Canton government declined to continue their co-operation.

A fire brigade is being organised, and promises well for the future.

The Canton Steamer was fired on and stopped the other day, because she attempted to pass the Chun-kai, a Chinese gun-boat in the service of the Canton government, without hoisting her flag. The matter is not yet at an end.

From Shanghai it is reported that the Ajax is still in the mud at the bottom of the river, and from Chefoo a moderate share of success at "the diggings" is the only news.

China to India.

(From the "North China Herald.")

When we last heard from Mr. Cooper, three months ago, he was on the point of leaving Ta-tsien-lou, in the extreme west of Szechuen, for the frontier of Thibet. He had been disappointed in his hope of crossing from Li-kiang to Bhamo, and now intended to try to reach India by way of Thibet and Nepaul. His success appeared very questionable, from the jealous exclusiveness which characterises the Thibetan policy as well as from the fact that till feeling, likely to recede within our memories, between the courts of Ehlassa and Khatmandu. But the length of time which had elapsed since his departure from Ta-tsien-lou had led us to hope that the first of his difficulties had been overcome; that he had succeeded in crossing the Thibetan frontier. And the cure of the Government of India had smoothed his road to Nepaul, if he could succeed in representing that country. We now, however, hear with great regret that he has been stopped at the frontier town of Bathang, and compelled to fall back on his last depôt of exchange to await further orders. From Bathang to Ta-tsien-lou is about twenty days' journey. The whole route is being fortified in the meantime, and extreme heat in the valleys has failed to obtain, and what he could get he was obliged to eat himself, while in addition to this discomfort, the cold and rarified atmosphere on the mountains painfully affected his breathing, and brought out swellings and a general rash over his body. Spies were in constant attendance—attendance a Chinese soldier—bent on finding out why he was travelling and on magnifying the horrors of the road. And after having passed through all this, he was told at Bathang that he could not proceed to Lhassa; that troops had even been sent to a small town before him to bar his passage. It was in vain he showed his passport and insisted on proceeding; the Chinese General, the commander-in-chief of the district, was deaf to every request which he preferred, and he urged that the Thibetans would interfere with him and refused to forward his journey. At this stage he learned that the road from Bathang to Ashen, three weeks' journey in length; and was delighted by an offer from the Chinese authorities to send him "home" by that route. The very object of his journey had been to demonstrate the practicability of communication between Western China and Assam; and in his ten days as guest he would have accomplished this object, and for the practice of British territory. But unfortunately the Chinese have already interfered and put a stop to the project. Mr. Cooper ascertained that they especially feared this route among the Singpho Naumti, Ekawati, Beesa, Lisuh, and Mantan, under the supreme command of General Nassan Saget, Commander-in-Chief, as said to be posted round the town, and issuing within a mile of the palace. The insurrectionary army is set down at 6,000 strong, the Cacos forming the greater portion. President Salnave remained in the National Palace at Port-au-Prince, sulking firstly, on occasion of the Commander-in-Chief's resignation, and afterwards not looking eagerly for the engagement, and check, if possible, the insurgents. On the 12th inst. he attacked a great force half a mile from Port au Prince, and is reported that the cost of munitions and the President got a good share of the victims beside. It came to be rumoured that the rebel army was about to make an attack on the capital on the anniversary of the "evacuation," and ordered to return the children to the place from which they were taken. This he flatly refused to do, and as the Executive of the Queen herself to arrange a friendly settlement with the Emperor (for in politics they are one) for its removal. Our Gengen connexion may occasionally engender jealousies of a leaning to the new power lately been erected in Germany. The King of Prussia and his minister would receive such gratification if these connexions with this country were prohibitive of a sympathetic movement; but to the same extent as gratification was afforded to one party would be created in the other. Upon the surface of things there is an appearance of brightness and ease which would not be maintained if the observer were curious to discover what is underneath. He told an enthusiastic audience that he be coming a good Austrian he had continued to be a good German; that he was wisely allied with Austria was solely concerned with her own affairs, and had nothing to do with those of Germany. Moreover, he could not, he declared without appearing to dictate, decide without appearing to dictate, decide without appearing to dictate on questions of peace and war. This was striking the right chord. It was the admission of the infamous edicts, in spite of the protest of the people of Hungary, and to which they have been conquered for the present by force and hesitation. Europe is going to submit to pressure, the latter upon its standing where French character and influence are already great, and in half stroke might secure a prize, in the meantime, changes will come because dangerous to public order so long as they are allowed freedom of speech, and so long as the reasonable demands of the people are acceded to by the independent Parliaments of North Germany and Austria."

Was King Theodore Deceived?

(From the "Morning Post.")

The public have no reason to feel dissatisfied with the hostile exhibition which has been passed in some few quarters upon the conduct of Lord Napier and Sir Robert Napier, for it has drawn from the gallant general, at Welsbpool, a plain-spoken statement of the actual facts, which appear to have been such as every fair-minded man naturally must have expected. The fault that in any way can be imputed to the conduct of the campaign, but the policy before Magdala. The point in dispute is whether Theodore was not driven to desperation by the final, final, and peremptory refusal which ended his last. Lord Napier declares it at no desperation was attributed by him personally, and when Theodore was practically in his power, only that the United States Government, for its own good reasons, never would recognize the existence of anything but a republic in Mexico, with Juarez at its head. What sort of sensure of power it is that Juarez and no one else is known in all the world, and as usually it would scarcely be worth while to go to him with a request for restoration of fallen. Lord Stanley intimates that we shall not apply for pardon to any Mexican ruler, and there are few who will quarrel with his decision. It is true that our countrymen in Mexico are deprived of the protection which they might find in the ranks of the distinguished Austrian, Mr. Hollister, returned from the coast on the night of the 13th instant. Mr. Hollister left Port-au-Prince for the purpose of offering the insurrectionary districts as a sort of peace commissioner, but the Stream having left only on the morning of the 14th, the result of his mission was not known. Money continued high; the quotation being 60 buying to one Spanish dollar, and at times the Government are said to have bought as high as 95 and 100. A barrel of flour brought 80 Haytaid dollars, and other commodities were proportionately high."

The Queen's Excursion to France.

(From the "Times" of the 29th.)

The interest of the summer excursion which her Majesty is making to the Continent this year will be heightened by the occurrence of an interview with the Empress Eugenie, and an interview with the Emperor of the French himself; and although there may be nothing more than the exchange of personal courtesies and the gratification of private friendship which is known to have always existed between these illustrious personages, the state of European politics is nevertheless likely to be touched upon; and there are points in question at the present moment within no one can refer to without attaching some degree of importance to them. Upon the surface of things there is an appearance of brightness and ease which would not be maintained if the observer were curious to discover what is underneath. The relations between the English and French Foreign Ministers must, therefore, be kept on a considerably friendly level; for it is not been of an unessential part of the Emperor's many cares the most prudent student of human nature to penetrate the secret designs of the irresolute. Unfortunately for the happiness of Europe, Great Britain, owing to the peculiar circumstances of her internal or political influence on the Continent requisite to ensure peace. A non-combatant on the eve of battle becomes a personage of minor consequence, and there is no immediate prospect of England's being drawn into the vortex of continental hostilities. At the present moment Lord Stanley's visit to M. de Moustier will occasion about the same influence on the events of the future that some influence on the afternoon visit of the Empress Eugenie to Queen Victoria.

The Transvaal Republic.

The beginning of the end is, we hope, not far off with Transvaal, now that President Pretorius has assumed to annex by proclamation a territory about three times the size of the present Republic. Recent revelations of the work of the slaveholders in the northern parts of the Transvaal show how the country is rifling into anarchy and confusion. Disbanded European levies, taking advantage of the distracted state of the country, are plundering the population and power, get up "expeditions" or "war parties" against the natives, upon flimsy pretexts, and their cattle are seized, men with women killed, and children carried away captive, which was said Jubilant hatred with fresh. A party of "plunderers" despondent not long ago returned to a country town in the Transvaal from Zambesiland, after having 55 children as booty. The south of Africa is evidently not the field for the enterprising Briton to settle in, and it is reported that the cost of what loss is not stated. The inhabitants of Port-au-Prince, especially foreign residents, were in the greatest state of alarm and flight, and in consequence of the continual disturbance, the streets night and day, and the wild rumours which prevailed daily respecting the probabilities of attacks and the probabilities of salnave carrying out his threats of setting fire to the town. This fear extended even to the inmates of the Foreign Consulates, including the refugees, and our informant asserts that there could not be a doubt entertained on that score—not a doubt—that if Salnave's cause was defeated, every foreigner would be massacred in a most barbarous manner. Keys from the Cayes would fall into the hands of the besieging forces. General Nissage Saget had left St. Marc and arrived at Croix des Bouquet intending to march thence to Port-au-Prince. On going to march thence to Port-au-Prince. On going to march thence to Port-au-Prince. On going

The Church Establishment.

The Daily News (Aug 11) questions the olicy of such elaborate arguments as those that put forward in a sermon by the Bishop of Rochester in favour of the union of Church d State. The writer or speaker who voluners to maintain what is not attacked, not infrequently finds that he has only suggested difficulties which might never have suggested themselves; while at the best the absence of avowed assailants reduces his championship to a superfluity. If there were nothing more to say than is put forward by the Bishop, those who are anxious to disabuse the connection will find when the time for action comes that they have an easier task than they looked for.
The lordship, specially warns his hearers against those who argue that the State ought to control and guide the religious expression which it supports; but the doctrine that the Legislature has this right is now propagated with singular ability. Its influence may be seen everywhere in the sort of paralysis which has overtaken the natural defenders of the principle of an establishment. They find that principle pushed to a length, and asserted to involve consequences, for which they had previously no conception; and the natural result is that they hesitate to take any active steps towards the support of a connection which for the first time in their lives they have learned to suspect. The full result of this inaction on their part it is not yet possible to predict; but it is a curious instance of the unconscious irony of events that a secession from the defenders of the union of Church and State, which may prove so formidable, should have been provoked by a new and ardent development of the Erastian principle.

The Latest Miracle.

The Wiltshire papers say that considerable excitement has been caused at New Swindon, by some so-called miraculous cures performed by the Rev. F. R. Young, the Unitarian minister.
The cure, it appears, is effected by "faith," i.e. the person operated upon must have faith. One case has attracted much attention. A Mrs.
Joseph Jones, living at New Swindon, was struck with paralysis about three months since, and lost the use of her lower limbs. She was unable to get up or down stairs, and her bed was made in the parlour. She could not even dress without assistance. On a certain Tuesday last month, Mr.
Young called upon her, and obtained permission to operate. We must let the reporter of the Wilts and Gloucester Standard describe the modus operandi:—"In the presence of another woman he first stroked her legs from the knees downwards, prayed earnestly, then passed his hands over her face in the manner of the mesmeric pass, and seizing her thumbs as she lay on her bed commanded her to get up and walk. The poor woman—we had these facts from her own mouth—says her sensations at that moment were indescribable. She got up and walked across the room as safe. Mr. Young strictly commanding her not to touch anything with her hands as an old invalid she. He then told her to walk down the passage, which she did, and the chief of the matter was reached when she walked upstairs. We ourselves on Tuesday morning saw her walk across a room.
It afterwards appeared that she had been in the habit of taking Turkish baths at the Volunteer Inn, New Swindon, being assisted there in a chair, but the bath did her little or no good.
The other evening she astonished the landlady of that inn by walking in to see her."—Bell's Mail Gazette.

The Times, in an article on Mr. Reed's re-ignation and its subsequent withdrawal, says ur remark if he to any against the Adalty is that we, who claim to be in first-c with all Powers, are content to draw all our owledge of sea-going ferret vessels from the periments of foreign Powers. It is not to be posed that the Americans, in three years covered the best possible application of the ed principle; but, instead of developing the ciple, we do all we can to discredit it. Broad-e ironclads were doomed two years ago, just en the present boat came into power, by the cessful introduction of citified steamboats to that time there was some hope of broad-e armoured ships affording a defence against e guns of an enemy. As gun-carriages and e purposes of offence, they were far inferior target vessels, but there did seem some ance of their defensive qualities proving still equate. But with chilled shot and shell this ope vanished finally and for ever, and there their blundering weakness, still seek to per-

The Admiralty.

he Post, dealing with Mr. Scully's charges nst the Admiralty, says: "The public denment of a State are nothing if they do not pectively and efficiently represent the emboed will of a national necessity. And the most ple critic of the Admiralty can hardly say the board has failed of late years to appre-and appreciate the great constructive pros of their day, or that they have shown a inclination to grapple with them when suffiently pressed. But that is not so much the t of Mr. Scully's charge against the Admiral-as that they have spent a great deal of money an unwisely, both in making constructive anges in the fleet, and in other matters of de-, which he duly specifies. We may, how-bend that the public will not take much erns in charges whereof the evidence o confliction, and which, after all, relate en-ly to the past, while they offer no guarantee the future. What the public are really in-ested in, and want the information required, is that accounts of direct and of indirect expendie of every dockyard be so worked as to enable proach estimate to be formed of the expendie in detail, of the issues and receipts, and of actual value of the stores in hand. With oults so rendered, the more difficult problem, ich Mr. Scully does not appear to have reached, the Cabinet as well as vigilant supervision of dockyards, will be advanced a step; and with solution of that problem rests the most ntial means of checking ill-judged or lavish enditure in future."

Dr. Disraeli making Dukes.

The Standard (Aug. 11) objects very strongly to the levity of the Times in "sneering," as it did in a recent article, at "Mr. Disraeli making dukes." It is very evident, it says, that the Times has not been "educated" by Mr. Disraeli, though in the article referred to it professed to have had that advantage. Its education has now for some time been in very different hands. Anybody who will compare the view just at present taken by the Times of dukes and the view always and still taken by Mr.
Bright of lords, will readily perceive at the first of what particular Gamaliel it has been sitting. But Mr. Bright is not its only schoolmaster. The professed Radical journals would full down and worship even a duke if he had been made on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone. Not that they would hate dukes less, but that they love Mr. Gladstone more—in her words, that they hate Mr. Disraeli more —more than dukes, more than the devil, more than anything. The Times, on the other hand, in its heart of hearts, does not dislike dukes.
At least those with which it is acquainted, and it is superfluous to say that they are only Whig dukes. The Times alludes to "transient jealousy being sometimes by such successions." No doubt it is in a position to speak with authority on this point. That Mr. Disraeli should be, as the Times says, unconstitutionally enough—calls him, a "duke-maker" must be to certain Whig peers unendurable.

A prosecution in the Thames police-court on Aug. 13, found his self in an awkward dilemma.
An Italian woman named Ellen Brian was charged with stealing a pair of boots from a mechanic named Taylor. The prosecutor got drunk and lay down on the ground and fell asleep.
While he was in that state his boots were taken from his feet. They were found on the prisoner, who was offering them for sale. The boots were valued at 8s. The prisoner having been committed for trial, the prosecutor asked for the boots. "They will be given up to you," said Mr. Paget, "after the trial." "But," replied the prosecutor, "I am barefooted. I have no other boots, and I can't go to my workshop and walk about without anything on my feet." Mr. Paget asked Inspector Cox if he had a pair of old policeman's boots to lend the man. Inspector Cox: "No sir, I have not indeed. The policemen all them when they cannot wear them any longer." Mr. Paget: "This comes of the prosecutor getting drunk and lying down in the street. Let him have his boots. Stamp them so that they can be identified at the sessions."

"The Moonstone."

(From the "Pall Mall Gazette.")

Mr. Collins is in the habit of prefixing short prefaces to his stories which might aim at lead one to think that he really looks upon his work as art. Whether this is a bit of self-delusion or a mere trick for deluding the public into the notion that the author's propensity ale is fine burgundy, who can tell? However this may be, it is certain that a conjuror at a country fair has as much right to prate about art as Mr. Wilkie Collins. The artist in the tights who keeps himself again by balancing a swiftly-revolving platter on a stick and might just as well, at the close of his performance, with copers duly collected, don a black coat and gravely inform his public that the artistic principle on which he had acted was this, that, or the other. We are amused by the conjuror, and in a less degree we are amused by Mr. Wilkie Collins, and we look upon one as about as much of an artist as the other. Mr. Collins may talk as he pleases about his proposing to trace the influence of circumstances upon character, or piercing the process and tracing the influence of character on circumstances. Everybody knows quite well that his single principle of composition is to hide away a needle in a bottle of hay, which the reader may be thoroughly sure will not disover itself until the end of the third volume. As a trick it has its merit, and we will not grudge Mr Collins a place in the pantheon of prestidigitateurs; he is even good as Anderson, but far inferior to Houdin in real conjuring capacity. In all the apparatus of his craft, in false bottoms and false tops, sliding panels, trap doors, artificial boards, ventriloquist effects, he is nearly as clever as anybody who ever fried in a pancake in a hat or poured a score of liquors out of an inexhaustible bottle. But in this, action, what fiction has come to? In this the chiefest power of modern inventiveness? Mr. Collins makes one of his puppets in the "Moonstone" mumble a good deal about the "detective fever." This is just what he appeals to in his readers, and to nothing else. If a man has more strong and childish curiosity for finding things out, whatever they may be, than are bidden, Mr. Collins's stories are absolutely barren places to him. You have a taste for watching the growth of character under circumstances for observing the play of motive and passion and interest; for studying the complexities, distortions, oddities of human nature; for marking the irony of fate and the sport which fortune makes of good men's dream or bad men's plots. Very well; in Mr. Collins's novels all this counts for nothing, and will stand you in no stead. You behold only a cunning game of puppets playing at hide-and-seek or hunt-the-slipper or blind-man's-buff very laboriously and strenuously, and that is all. The simple quality necessary in the lover of Mr. Collins's "art" is the vacuous curiosity of the schoolboy or the scullery-maid; a knack of becoming mentally breathless on the very slightest provocation; a passion for finding out a little artificial secret, which leads to nothing and are nothing. We scarcely see how anything could be meaner than work whose solitary peculiarity is its success in stimulating and feeding this marvellously poor and unfruitful temper. Art appeals to the best elements in men—to their capacity for wide sympathy with all human quality and mental men's fortunes, their love of beauty and of reality duly shaped and informed, their power of looking into the depths of life and desiring no less than up to their heights; it tests their correctness of observation, their soundness and width of reflection; it gives them rational and intelligible delight. But we do not usually bestow the name of rational and intelligible delight on the emotion with which we answer a riddle, or successfully fit in the pieces of an intricate puzzle. And Mr. Collins is a simple puzzle-maker for children, or for such adults as have not, nor ever will, put away childish things. Some champion of the Collins school has sneered at critics for objecting to a story being very interesting. On the contrary, we object to this sort of story that it is not at all interesting, excepts for babes and and sucklings; and that such interest as it excites even in them is of a mean and scrannery kind. It not only does not elevate directly, it fails to refresh us even indirectly. Story-telling like Mr. Collins's, which is mere tricky concealment of a secret, and nothing besides, is the most miserable business in the world to men and women who cannot feel refreshed unless you appeal in some sort to the better parts of their intelligence.

If anything could aggravate the fundamental pettiness of structure in such a story as the "Moonstone." It would be the manner in which Mr. Collins has thought it best to set up his puzzle. Nothing more thoroughly grievous in the way of form was ever devised. The story is told me by a number of persons in Mr. Collins's usually flat and affectedly prosaic manner, only this time he has exceeded himself in the stupidity and wearisome monotony of some of the people into whose diaries he has chosen to put his tale. Throughout the first volume and a portion of the next, we are handed over to an astonishing idiot, in the shape of an old family servitor, whose silliness and imbecilities Mr. Collins brings into as much prominence as if they had been newly discovered and curiously subtle traits of character.

But the first person to whom Mr. Collins entrusts his narrative is quite bright and interesting by comparison with the second. A stupid old servitor with nothing worse than a weakness for a pipe and "Robinson Crusoe," is some degrees less offensive and wearisome than an Evangelical lady of the most ungenerated description. Surely Mr. Collins cannot deceive himself into supposing that his horrible Miss Clack is a creation. In fact, she is no more than the stock fanatic of the property room. Purged into sanity and decorated with scarring new paint. To have introduced the eye-rolling now and again might have been endurable; but imagine an author's infatuation in making her the mouthpiece of an important part of his story, and severely exaggerating all the conventional peculiarities of her tribe at the same time. We can only say that Miss Clack's part of the narrative is one of the most preposterous and overdone pieces of parody in existence. So much stale and strained fun was ever before snuffered for the requirements of discerning public. What could any caricature—and evidently meant to imitate Mr. Dickens again—than the talk between Mr. Godfrey Ablewhite and Miss Clack? "I really do hope," says the first, "to look in at the Mothers-Small-Clothes, next week. Did you make cheering progress at Monday's committee? Was the board hopeful about the future prospects?" And are we ready off for trousers? Only think what poor worn-out stuff this is; what an ancient weedy kind of satire! And the way in which Miss Clack takes it:—"The very gentleness of his smile made his apologies irresistible. The richness of his deep voice added its own indescribable charm to the interested business question which he had just addressed to me. In truth we were almost too nicely off for trousers," and so forth. Surely in stuff like this we discover the lowest dregs of sarcastic humour. Even apart from the dullness and folly of the various persons to whom Mr. Collins thus commits his puzzle, there is a stupendous incongruity and incoherence in this form which one cannot get over. It is a trick, and a childish and meaningless trick into the bargain. Mr. Collins is the last person in the world who should try it, for he has no little versatility of style as any writer living; and by consequence in spite of changes of costume, the various narrators carry on the story with just the same tone and turn of sentence, until one all but falls asleep or sings the book aside. The whole performance is so profoundly unreal. Of course, all fiction is more or less illusion, but this is like bad and clumsy acting—it is illusion we cannot help seeing through. How can a man finds himself seeing through. How can a man finds himself when he finds a chief character, supposed to be but the moment of German tendencies, saying that the heroine's conduct is "perfectly intelligible if you will only do her the common justice to take the objective view first, and the subjective view next, and the objective subjective view to wind up with?" What do we know?" continues the German-minded gentleman: "we know that the loss of the Moonstone threw her into a state of nervous excitement, from which she has not recovered yet. Do you mean to deny the objective view, so far? Now, being in a state of nervous excitement, how are we to expect that she should behave as she might otherwise have behaved to any of the people about her? Arguing in this way from within outwards, what do we reach? We reach the subjective view. Very well, then, what follows? The objective-subjective explanation follows, of course. Reached properly speaking is not Rachel, but somebody else." What there ever anything in the way of fun sorrier than this? Both here and in his more serious attempts at social satire and Thackeray-an humour, there is a limpness about the workmanship which is the least pleasing quality it could have. As a puzzle maker, as the mover of marionettes, Mr. Collins is clever and ingenious enough for people who cannot see through the rameness of the trick; but as a creator of character, a depicter of the mutual play of character and circumstances, as a humourist, may heaven defend us from him!
